Uneven and generic

By olwol

These nine stories come from Aesop, the Brothers Grimm, Hans Christian Andersen, and other sources of folk tales. The re-tellings are uneven, the four authors vary from traditional to modernizing, and the nine illustrators are faithful to the re-tellings. Catherine McCafferty's version of "The Ant and the Grasshopper" has a happy ending, in which the grasshopper mends his ways. Lisa Harkrader's "City Mouse and Country Mouse" loses all its power by concluding with a "to each his own" ending; however she did better with "The Nightingale," preserving some of the charm of the Andersen tale. Jennifer Boudart's "Brave Little Tailor" (Grimm) and "Brownie of Blednock" (Scottish folk tale) are well-crafted, age-appropriate renderings of the originals. All of the preceding are published authors; I was unable to find any information on Brian Conway, the author of four of these tales, but I find it curious that (1) Saint George has no cross whatsoever, no mention of Christ; (2) "The Golden Goose" ended abruptly, as if he'd given up on the story; (3) "The Wild Swans" glossed over the element of witchcraft, and (4) Morgiana ("Ali Baba") is not a slave. Getting a little generic, are we? Children love stories with morals, and this collection gets a "C".

easy to read

By cassandra johnston

Very kid friendly, easy to read. My little guy loves it!

Nice Book

By Jennifer Shymanik

Not your same old story book. Pages are thick, illustrations are nicely done, and the stories aren't half bad.
